Biography

David Marshall is an Irish writer whose work combines long-form essays, public-policy analysis, editorial development, and publication architecture.

His current work explores governance, infrastructure, institutions, civic systems, and the structures that shape public life. Alongside his writing, he works on publication planning, editorial strategy, structural editing, and the development of coherent publishing projects across digital platforms.

Through Marshall.ie and its related publications, he publishes essays, commentary, policy writing, reviews, and field notes. His work is guided by an interest in how ideas are organised, communicated, and sustained through effective editorial and publishing structures. Earlier in his career, he became known for writing about walking, travel and place. While that work remains part of his archive, his current focus is on governance, institutions, infrastructure and publication architecture.

He is based in Ireland.
